Due to the high nickel (Ni), chromium (Cr) content, with good resistance to oxidation, corrosion resistance, acid and alkali, high-temperature performance, high-temperature resistant steel pipe used in the manufacture of electric furnace tubes, and other occasions, austenitic stainless steel to increase carbon content.

Due to its solid solution strengthening to enhance the strength of austenitic stainless steel chemical composition based on chromium, nickel-based addition of molybdenum, tungsten, niobium, titanium, and other elements, due to its organization of face-centered cubic structure, Thus at high temperatures have high strength and creep strength. Melting points at 1470°C, and 800°C began to soften, and allowable stress continued to decrease.
