Product Description

201 Stainless Steel Plate Features Is poured with molten steel, cooled and pressed into flat steel. It is flat, rectangular and can be rolled directly or cut from a wide strip of steel. 201/201LN stainless steel plate is an austenitic steel. Its primary alloying elements are chromium, nickel, and magnesium. It shows excellent toughness at lower temperatures and is purposed across industries for use in appliances, restaurant equipment, sinks, automotive trim, and more. In the annealed condition, this austenitic steel is non-magnetic, but can become magnetic when cold worked. It demonstrates excellent toughness at lower temperatures as its strength increases. It can be fabricated by bench, roll forming, and bending. Though this stainless steel is weldable, it shows the poorest quality welds with greater risk for intergranular corrosion. It is not hardenable by heat treatment. 201LN stainless steel was specifically designed for service at lower temperatures. The chemical composition varies slightly to accentuate mechanical properties like toughness and resistance to impact loading, which are critical factors at low temperatures. Stainless Steel 201 Sheet is high-alloys steel, which exhibits excellent corrosion resistance due to the presence of a high amount of chromium. On the basis of crystalline finish, SS 201 Sheets can be categorized into ferrite, austenitic and martensitic steel group. Apart from this, UNS S20100 Stainless Steel Sheets are offered into various types like Hot & Cold Rolled Sheets, SS 201 Perforated Sheets, and Decorative Sheets, etc.
