Product Description

H60 Copper Pipe ASME Standard 22mm OD 1.5mm Thickness Purple Color Electronic Use

Product Description

Copper pipe, also known as copper pipe, belongs to a kind of non-ferrous metal pipe, is pressed and drawn seamless pipe. Copper PIPE HAS strong, corrosion resistance characteristics, and become the modern contractor in all residential commercial water pipe, heating, cooling pipe installation of the first choice.

Light weight, good thermal conductivity, high strength at low temperature. It is often used to manufacture heat exchange equipment (such as condensers). It is also used to assemble cryogenic pipes in oxygen production equipment. Copper pipe with small diameter is often used for conveying liquid under pressure (such as lubrication system, hydraulic system, etc.) and pressure measuring pipe used as instrument, etc.

Copper pipe is hard, not easy to corrosion, and high temperature and high pressure resistance, can be used in a variety of environments. Compared WITH THIS, THE SHORTCOMING OF A LOT OF OTHER MATERIAL IS OBVIOUS, FOR EXAMPLE THE GALVANIZED STEEL PIPE WITH MULTI-PURPOSE IN THE PAST RESIDENCE, EASY RUST, USE TIME IS NOT LONG CAN APPEAR THE PROBLEM SUCH AS TAP WATER YELLOWING, CURRENT DECRESCENT. Other materials rapidly lose strength at high temperatures, making them unsafe to use in hot water pipes, and copper's melting point is as high as 1083 degrees Celsius, making the temperature of the hot water system negligible. Archaeologists have discovered a 4,500-year-old copper pipe inside an Egyptian pyramid that is still functional.
