Product Description

TP2 Copper Pipe AISI Standard 63mm OD 3mm Thickness Purple Color Construction Use

Product Description

Copper pipe (also known as copper pipe), commonly used in water pipes, heating and cooling pipes, can be used in a variety of environments. Copper pipe sets the advantages of metal and non-metal pipe in one, in the hot and cold water system exclusive first, is the best connection pipe. Copper tubes are refractory and heat resistant, and can retain their shape and strength at high temperatures without aging. The pressure resistance of copper pipe is several times or even dozens of times that of plastic pipe and aluminum-plastic pipe, and it can withstand the highest water pressure in today's buildings. In hot water environment, with the extension of the service life, the bearing capacity of plastic tubing significantly decreased, and the mechanical properties of copper tubing remain unchanged in all thermal temperature ranges, so its pressure resistance will not be reduced, nor will there be aging phenomenon. The linear expansion coefficient of copper pipe is very small, is 1/10 of plastic pipe, will not cause stress fatigue rupture because of excessive thermal expansion and cold contraction. The strength of copper tube is larger, and the outer diameter is smaller under the requirement of ensuring effective inner diameter, which is more suitable for dark burial. Light weight, good thermal conductivity, high strength at low temperature. It is often used to manufacture heat exchange equipment (such as condensers). It is also used to assemble cryogenic pipes in oxygen production equipment. Copper pipe with small diameter is often used for conveying liquid under pressure (such as lubrication system, hydraulic system, etc.) and pressure measuring pipe used as instrument, etc.
