Product Description

Brass Piping Tube H59 Grade Customized Length 1mm Thickness 8mm Outer Diameter Liquid Transfer

Product Description

The more malleable or workable brasses can be divided into those that are worked cold, which generally have less than 40% zinc, and those with a greater zinc content, which are best applied to hot working.

The primary group, known as the alpha brasses are widely used in the production of screws, ammunition casings, pins and bolts to name a few.

Beta brasses are less ductile but much more resilient and are best used for taps, windows, door fittings, and other fixtures.

Lastly, the alpha-beta brasses or the 'hot-working' brasses contain a higher zinc component - not as tough as the beta brasses but stronger than alpha brasses, they mix characteristics of both. Among this collection of brasses are the lead brasses, the lead element makes the brass more machinable. Then there are the naval and admiralty brasses, these utilise a small amount of tin to improve corrosion resistance, and are ideally used for saltwater. And finally, the aluminium brasses, which provide strength and resilience.
