Product Description

Seamless Mild Steel Pipes Tubes 20# ASTM AISI SAE1020 273mm OD SCH80 Customized Length

Product Description

1020 carbon steel is made by mixing the molten metals and then hot rolling them. This process is similar to most carbon steels, and the only real difference is the chemical composition.

To produce 1020 carbon steel, iron is smelted in a furnace, and coke is added. The impurities are then burnt off. A secondary refining process then takes place in which the steel is added to an LF or RF furnace to carry out further decarburization, desulfurization, and deoxidation until the right chemical composition is achieved. The steel can then be poured into a variety of shapes, in a range of dimensions. The steel can then be either hot-rolled, hot-forged, cold-rolled, or annealed.
